

I fully support AOPA's petition to re-open the DC3 airports.

General aviation aircraft of the size and type that use the DC3 airports present no threat to Washington or any other locale. They have very little mass and travel at low velocity. In addition, their weight carrying capacity is extremely low, making them a poor terrorist weapon. Automobiles and trucks are far more capable in terms of their weight capacity and ability to travel unnoticed.

As noted by AOPA, the mere possibility of a terrorist attack is not sufficient cause for severely restricting the freedoms of so many law abiding citizens and aviation related businesses.
